Her Majesty met Putin on a number of occasions during her 70 years on the throne - but the most eventful was Putin's state visit to the UK in 2003.

He made the palce nervous after leaving the monarch waiting for 14 minutes - and a dog's reaction to the Russian dictator allegedly prompted The Queen to break protocol and take a brutal swipe at him.

According to David Blunkett, who was Home Secretary at the time, his guide dog reacted defensively towards Putin.

He told the BBC : "The only time I met Vladimir Putin was back in 2003 on an official visit and my then dog barked very loudly.

"I did apologise to the Queen who was obviously hosting. I don't think I am giving anything away when I said, 'Sorry your Majesty about the dog barking.'

"She said, 'Dogs have interesting instincts, don't they?'"

William & Charles' 'days are numbered'

The CEO of an anti-monarchy group claims people see “the Queen as the monarchy and the monarchy as the Queen”.

Graham Smith claims people see the royal family as “a sense of tradition and history in connection with the war and the pre-war period, when the monarchy felt like it was the genuine article”.

Prince Charles and his son Prince William, meanwhile, do not come across the same way, Graham Smith told Express.co.uk.

He said: “I think that the monarchy’s days are numbered.

“It's just a matter of when rather than if because it has survived this long because of the Queen.”

'It's the royal women keeping show on road'

This is a comment piece by Petronella Wyatt

The semi-detached Prince Harry continues his myopic moanathon from Montecito, yet remains a Counsellor of State. Likewise the disgraced Duke of York, who still holds sway over our Queen.

Even Prince Charles's usually crystalline reputation has been sewered by allegations of cash for honours, which, in fairness, he denies all knowledge of.

Not for the first time in British history, it has been left to the female side, and in particular the Wives of Windsor, to pick up the slack for Queen and country.

we should all go down on our knees and thank heaven for such a golden harvest of royal women.

When will Prince Louis be christened?

Traditionally, a royal baby is christened two to three months after their birth – and this is also the case for Prince Louis.

It has been announced he will be christened on Monday July 9 – and we're unlikely to see him again before then, according to royal experts.

He will be christened by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Reverend Justin Welby.

The venue is The Chapel Royal, St James's Palace in London, which is where his brother George was christened back in 2013.

Why Princess Charlotte wasn't christened in the Chapel Royal like her brothers

THE christening of Prince Louis is just around the corner and will take place at Chapel Royal in St James' Palace – the same location of the christening of Prince George.

But was there a reason why Princess Charlotte, three, didn't have her religious ceremony at the same location?

Kate Middleton and Prince William's only daughter was instead christened at the Church of St Mary Magdalene at Sandringham – the same place that Princess Diana was christened.

The different location was not due to rank or gender, as she is currently higher than Prince Louis in the line of succession.

Her full name is Charlotte Elizabeth Diana, with her middle name being a nod to Prince William's mother, who passed away in 1997.

Queen faces pressure to strip Harry of official role

The Queen is under pressure from both the public and Parliament to strip Prince Harry and Prince Andrew of official roles as Counsellors of State.

According to the Parliamentary paper, Prince Harry should no longer be eligible for the role given that the UK is no longer his permanent residence since he stepped back from royal life.

The guidance under The Regency Act of 1937 states that all people who hold this position should be members of the Royal Family and importantly, "must be domiciled in 'some part' of the UK."

The Regency Act of 1943 added that "if it appears to the Sovereign that any eligible Counsellor will be absent from the United Kingdom or intends to be so absent during the whole or any part of the period of such delegation, then Letters Patent [a legal tool at the Monarch's disposal] may make provision for exempting that person."

Racing trophy awarded by Queen Victoria could fetch £30,000 at auction

A recently rediscovered horse racing trophy awarded by Queen Victoria in 1845 could fetch £30,000 at auction next month.

Dubbed Her Majesty's Vase, the silver piece was won by Sir John Barker-Mill at the Plymouth, Devon and Cornwall horse races and passed down through his family.

However, the trophy was separated from its stand and the award's significance was forgotten over time.

Both pieces were recently brought back together when Sir John's living relatives discovered the engraved base in an outbuilding.

The trophy is expected to fetch between £20,000 and £30,000 when it goes under the hammer at Chiswick Auctions in London in March.

It was commissioned for the races by Queen Victoria and crafted by silversmith John Samuel Hunt, and inspired by an ancient vase dating from the 2nd century AD that was found in fragments in 1770 at the bottom of a lake at Hadrian's Villa near Rome.

Unlike his father, a move to Eton could now be off the table as the royal couple consider moving the their son to a prep school in Berkshire.

According to royal reporter Rebecca English, the Lambrook School is widely considered a front-runner for the Prince.

For George's siblings, however, they will remain at Thomas's Battersea for now.

Writing in the Daily Mail, English claimed that reports suggest Princess Charlotte is "super happy and settled" at the school, and is likely to be joined by her younger brother Prince Louis.

Spitting Image puppet

Epstein's former PA Ms Sjoberg has claimed that her alleged incident with Andrew took place at the the pedophile's New York townhouse.

She says the prince touched her breast while a latex puppet of Andrew from UK satirical TV show Spitting Image was being used to abuse then 17-year-old Ms Giuffre by Epstein's madam Ghislaine Maxwell.

Ms Sjoberg - who was not an alleged victim at the New York trial which found Maxwell, 60, guilty of sex trafficking of minors in December - first told of her encounter with Andrew in 2007.

Described as a "church-going all American brunette" from Maine, she claimed to have met Andrew after arriving at Epstein's mansion following a day of sightseeing in New York.

She said: "Prince Andrew was there and Ghislaine and a couple of other girls my age.

"Andrew was very charming. I didn't know exactly who he was but felt that I knew him.

"She (Maxwell) came down with a present for him – a latex puppet of him from Spitting Image.

"We had a picture taken. Virginia, another girl there, sat on a chair and had the puppet on her lap.

"Andrew sat on another chair, I sat on his lap – and he put his hand on my breast.

"Ghislaine put the puppet's hand on Virginia's breast, then Andrew put his hand on mine."

MS GIULIE'S case was allowed by a NEW YORK law which gave victims of historic child sex abuse a year to sue their alleged abusers despite the statute of limitations.

Florida hair salon owner Johanna Sjoberg, 42, has repeatedly claimed that Andrew touched her breast in 2001 when she was 21.

So far she would have been able to sue the prince for the alleged sex assault because the child sex abuse law did not apply to her and too much time has gone by.

But new bill which could be signed into law in New York this year would allow victims of adult sex abuse to bring their allegations to court too.
